THE COVER-ALL.

Children's Sleeping Garments completely cover little ones and prevent chilling the body during the night hours when circulation is low.

The knit fabric contains a small percentage of fine wool, just enough to absorb the perspiration of the body and avoid the clammy effect common to all garments made exclusively of cotton.

The cotton and the wool are double carded with infinite care and so thoroughly mixed that every thread has its exact portion.

The fabric is specially designed on correct, hygienic principles to keep the body both dry and warm and thus induce healthful sleep.

The fabric is washed and shrunk before cutting and positively will not shrink or scratch.

1 to 9-year sizes.

LUXURIOUS COMFORTS

Perhaps you think comfort quality varies slightly—that all comforts at $1.00 are pretty much alike. Well we want you to examine as many $1.00 comforts as you possibly can, then tell us what you think of ours. After many years experience in comfort buying and selling, we unhesitatingly declare these $1.00 Comforts the greatest values for the price ever offered.

WILSON CARRIES FORTY STATES

DEMOCRATS WILL HAVE CONTROL OF BOTH HOUSES OF NATIONAL LEGISLATURE.

HIGHEST ELECTORAL VOTE

Victory Capture 433 Electors—Progressive Ticket Is Second in Race—Republicans Have Two States.

Western Newspaper Union News Service. Cincinnati, O.—The election of Tuesday, November 5th, resulted in the victory of a Democratic presidential ticket for the first time in 20 years. The tabulated vote will be found in another column of this issue. For the first time in 18 years the Democratic party has captured the executive and legislative branches of the national government, and will be in position to take positive control of the situation March 4.

Woodrow Wilson, President-Elect.

Woodrow Wilson's vote in the electoral college will be 433, William Howard Taft will have 8, and Theodore Roosevelt is credited with 9. The Wilson vote marks a new record in national elections, although his popular vote probably will be less than that of any president elected since 1892.

In the overthrow of the Republican party, 18 Democratic governors were chosen out of the 27 voted for.

Enough state legislatures were changed from Republican to Democratic to overcome the Republican majority in the senate, the figures giving the victorious party a clear majority of two in the upper house of the national legislature, and Miles Poindexter, elected from Washington as a Progressive, announcing that he will bolt the Republican caucus when he returns to Washington.

In addition to the election of successors to Democratic senators now sitting Democratic will displace Republican senators from Oregon, New Jersey, Kansas, Colorado, Montana, Delaware and Nevada, and will fill the vacancy in Colorado with a man of their choosing.

Bull Moose Is Second.
When it became apparent that Wilson had swept the country main interest centered in the race between Taft and Roosevelt, the party winning second place gaining many advantages, such as representatives on nonpartisan commissions and on election boards. While the Bull Moose ticket undoubtedly has an aggregate vote in the country much greater than that of the regular Republicans, it came in third on state tickets in many important commonwealths, notably New York, Ohio and Illinois, and in the latter state the election board issued already has been decided in favor of the Republican organization.

The strength of the Socialist vote is one of the features of the election, especially in the industrial centers of the Middle West, where in more than one place Debs outran his three presidential rivals. The one national asset of the Socialist party, Representative Victor Berger, however, went down to defeat in his efforts to secure re-election from the Milwaukee district, and several Socialist city governments were rebuked by the voters by retirement from office.

President Taft captures two states—one in New England and the other in the far West. Roosevelt took one Eastern state, two from the Middle West and one from the far West and one Pacific coast state. Wilson took all the others.

Four States Give Women Votes.
Additional interest was furnished in several states by the submission of woman's suffrage to the voters at the regular election. As a result four states, Michigan, Oregon, Kansas and Arizona were added to the six wherein women already had the ballot. With ten states giving to women equal political rights with men the friends of the movement claim that the nationwide success of woman suffrage is not far distant. Prohibition was submitted in West Virginia and Colorado, winning in the former and suffering defeat in the latter.

WILL NOT DISCUSS POLITICS.

Princeton, N. J.—President-elect Woodrow Wilson intends to follow out his listening policy for several weeks before making any announcements of important matters of state. The president-elect said he had decided to go away on a vacation of three or four weeks, during which time he would be out of reach of political callers. It is probable that he will make known very little about the policy of his future administration before January 1. He will then listen to advisors.

There is a higher duty than to build almshouses for the poor, and that is to save men from being degraded to the blighting influence of an almshouse. Man has a right to something more than to be kept in a room from starving. He has a right to the aids and encouragements and culture, by which he may fulfill the destiny of a man, and until society is brought to recognize and reverence this it will continue to groan under its present miseries.—Channing.

Verifications, not only of the Psalms but of the other books of the Bible, were numerous in the sixteenth century. One of the most prolific versifiers was William Hunnia, who, under such fanciful titles as "Seven Robs of a Sorrowful Soul for Sin," "A Handful of Honeyuckles," "A Hivelf of Hitey," etc., published a number of rhyming versions of Genesis and Job, which are now worth their weight in gold to the bibliomaniac.

RICH INDIAN LAND

Fort Peck Reservation Ready for Settlers Next Spring.

Last Big Tract Left in West—Soil Unusually Productive in Grain, As Shown By Progress Made By Tribes Themselves.

Butte, Mont.—Two million acres of land in Montana, now known as the Fort Peck Indian reservation, will be thrown open for settlement by the government next spring. This is the last large tract of public land in the west that has not been opened to settlers.

Inasmuch as less than one per cent of this land has been cultivated and all of it is said to be fertile, it is estimated that the harvest will be enriched by 20,000,000 bushels of grain a year after it is settled and developed. The share of this tract allotted to Indians of many tribes is 723,693 acres. The rest is uncultivated.

"On the supposition that the uncultivated lands were devoted to the growing of wheat on the summer fallow, which would mean that one-half the area would be in crop at one time, and on the further supposition that the wheat would yield 25 bushels per acre, which is a moderate estimate for yields on land thus prepared, the aggregate production would be 19,312,500 bushels," Thomas Shaw, agricultural expert, estimates.

Prof. Shaw further says: "If this land were entirely devoted to the growing of barley on the summer fallow plan, the yield would be 30,900,000 bushels, as barley grown on such land should average 10 bushels per acre. If the entire area were devoted to the growing of oats on the same lines, the total production would be 38,625,000 bushels, as 50 bushels per acre would not be an extravagant estimate for land thus farmed."

The Fort Peck reservation will also be the scene of a unique event when the first county fair ever held by Indian tribes will open there. At this fair will be shown the rapid progress made by the red men in extensive agriculture after only a few years of instruction in modern farming methods.

There will be exhibited at this time some unusual specimens of grain and grasses that will also be entered later in the year at eastern land shows in competition with prize products of the white man. This progress has all been made in the last two years, since before that time hardly any of the land was being developed with modern methods.

A year ago the Great Northern railroad sent a representative body of the tribes inhabiting this region to the New York land show to give them an opportunity to see what the white man was doing to wrest a living from the soil. The exhibits there were carefully studied, and the representatives returned to their people with ideas as revolutionary as they proved to be profitable. Instead of truck farmers living in tepees, they resolved to be ranchers living in comfortable cottages overlooking thousands of acres. That they went to work with a vim is shown by the fact that at the present time there are twice as many acres of land under cultivation as there were a year ago.

Agriculture is not the only form of American civilization the Indians on this reservation have assimilated. They have also learned to play football.

The Indian civilization will not be entirely overshadowed by what has been learned from the white man, however, all the old tribal customs will be perpetuated in dances and ceremonies that have been handed down for centuries.

The Sioux will hold their annual festival at which all the weird rites of their forefathers will be used.

Owner of Shelter Cabin in Colorado Had Prepared Concoction for Thieves.

Denver, Colo.—When it comes to narrow escapes on the part of the law, the story of George W. Smith is about as good as the record.

Before the deer season opened Smith left Denver for a visit to Gunnison and a tour of the surrounding country.

Three thousand redmen, in native attire, will be gathered outside the agency town in a vast circle of tepees, and it will be a scene marked for its brilliancy.

BOYS ARE TRAPPED BY TIDE

They Shout and Fire Shotguns Until Help Comes After Night-fall.

Philadelphia.—Clinging to the stump of a tree on an inundated island in Darby creek, Edward Haberle, 18 years old, and Winfield Toy, 16 years old, both of Collingdale, were rescued with the water within a few inches of their feet and high tide still coming in.

The young men were exhausted and collapsed when taken into a boat that had gone from Collingdale to their rescue.

Early in the afternoon Haberle and Toy, armed with shotguns, started out to hunt blackbirds. At low tide there are numerous small islands in the "broken meadows," and the boys wandered in search of game. Toward evening they suddenly awoke to a realization that the tide was rising and that they were cut off from the mainland. Neither of them could swim, so they climbed up the trunk of a dead tree that extended five feet above the level of the island.

Darkness was coming on, and the boys in terror, shouted for help. Their cries were unanswered. Then they started to fire their guns. Each had about fifteen rounds of ammunition, and they fired every shot before attracting attention. Just as they had

New York.—Shark fishing has long since assumed the proportions of a gentle art down Costa Rica way, according to the stock tales of returning tourists, but it remained for a young Brooklyn girl—Miss Cecile Des Place—to startle the natives with a catch that set angler tongues wagging all up and down the wild coast. With fifteen minutes fishing to her credit, Miss Des Place landed a 300-pound man-eating shark that set the populace of Port Limon by the ears and caused her name to be displayed in scarehead type in the Costa Rican dailies. Her coup was set down as an epoch marker in a country where men hunt up the monsters of the deep for a living and make big catches every day of the week.

Miss Des Place arrived home aboard the Hamburg-American liner Prinz August Wilhelm, and in her traveling bag were several long teeth pulled from the head of her big sensational catch as souvenirs. He called to the boys to swim across, and when he learned that neither could swim, told them to remain where they were until he summoned help. It was so dark when the rescue boat arrived that the policemen could not see the boys, and had to be guided by their shouts. According to the police, the tree trunk upon which the young men took refuge is completely covered when the tide reaches its highest mark.

INFORMATION WANTED

By JULIUS CAREY.

Sylvester was limping slightly as he approached the breakfast table, but Mrs. Sylvester, having troubles of her own, did not comment upon it.

"I believe I must have a touch of rheumatism," she remarked, lifting the coffee pot wearily.

"Whatever that may be!" responded her husband scornfully. "The truth of the matter probably is that you got all tired out running up and down stairs when you were cleaning the attic yesterday."

"Oh, it certainly can't be that," she replied, "because you know, the doctors say now that running up and down stairs is the very best kind of exercise."

"The doctors!" he scoffed, trying as he spoke to find a comfortable position for his left leg. "If we are going to do all the fool things the doctors advise, or refrain from doing all the desirable things they forbid, we shall have a delightful time of it!"

"It grieves me to think," he continued, "how many good things I've missed because the doctors forbade them, only to be told a little later that it didn't make any difference, after all."

I shall never cease to regret the rich breakfasts I didn't eat during a period when I fondly trusted in the assertion of the doctors that red meat caused rheumatism."

"They've found out now that it's strawberries," said Mrs. Sylvester. "I was reading an article yesterday, by a doctor—"

"No doubt you were," interrupted her husband. "It's just the time of the year that the medical fraternity would choose for the publication of an article denouncing strawberries—right in the season when they are the most tempting. Why, I had a dish for luncheon yesterday that made life seem worth living again. So the doctors have combined to deprive us of the solace of eating fresh strawberries, have they? Well, they can't work it on me this time! I'm a patient creature, but my patience has its limits. Not till I've forgotten the long dreary winter, during which I abstained from eating raw oysters for fear of typhoid, only to read in the first month of the year without an R an article by some noted medical man asserting that the percentage of typhoid due to oysters is so small as to be negligible."

"It's best to be on the safe side," said Mrs. Sylvester.

"The safe side, indeed!" he exclaimed. "Oh, certainly! You got a great deal of comfort out of being on the safe side when you used to arrange all the grape seeds so carefully along the edge of your plate. If you swallowed a single one by mistake you worried for weeks in fear of an attack of appendicitis! I don't notice you troubling much about grape seeds in late years. And why? Simply because your feminine credulity has been satisfied by the assertion of some doctor that grape seeds are not the cause of appendicitis, after all!"

Mrs. Sylvester began to look alarmed.

"We have been exhorted to wear flannels and not to wear flannels," he went on. "We've been admonished to drink water during meals, after having been solemnly warned never to do so."

"They do seem to change their minds pretty often," admitted Mrs. Sylvester.

Sylvester continued oratorically: "Each succeeding generation of doctors since the days of Aesculapius, or whatever his name was, has pronounced false the opinions of the preceding generation."

His wife looked thoroughly frightened. "It's perfectly dreadful!" she exclaimed. "I really never thought about it before."

"Ah-oo!" groaned Sylvester, who had so far forgotten himself as to draw back his left leg quickly.

"What is it, Henry?" asked his wife anxiously. "Oh, I don't know what on earth we should do if you were to get sick, with the doctors all disagreeing and changing their minds every few minutes."

"Nothing's the matter with me," he replied. "I was about to say, however, that, of course, the doctors are bound to hit it once in a while, and there may be something, after all, in that idea that strawberries cause rheumatism. I've been having a litte pain in my left foot for a day or two, and as I've been eating strawberries every day for luncheon, I don't know but it might be a good thing to stop in on my way to the train and ask the doctor what he thinks about it."

"Do!" exclaimed Mrs. Sylvester, as interested that her own aches were forgotten. "It's so much more comfortable to be sure."

Last Omnibus in Paris. Under the headline "It Was the Last" the Paris Mntin tells the story of the passing of the last horse omnibus. The vehicle was one of the last to make way for the motor buses, which now have no opposition except the trolley lines. All along the route followed by the "last of its family" the people cheered and sang, and "taken as a whole," says the writer, "it was a most notable function."

A very neat seven-room suburban home is illustrated in this plan. Of course, one of the rooms upstairs is small; but it works in just right for a sewing room, a nursery for the children or a den. It will prove to be one of the most useful rooms in the house.

Such houses are usually built far enough away from the city to have plenty of play ground for the children. This means that there are children in the family, and where there are children the sewing machine is a very important household help that should be in commission most of the time. This fact makes it very unhandy at times to have the sewing machine in the dining-room or living room, as we often see it. It is more work to wheel the machine out from its retirement in some dark corner and to get the materials from some out-of-the-way cupboard than to do a small bit of sewing by hand. So a good machine often remains idle just because the house wife has no easy way of getting at it.

Where a house plan admits of having a small room on the second floor that may be utilized for this purpose the architect is not doing justice to the future owner if he fails to work it in. It is handy for a woman's personal use every day in the year and is worth a great deal when you have a periodical visit from the dressmaker. Every woman appreciates a work shop suitable to the business in relieves the living room of an encumbrance.

The planning of a niche of this kind for the piano is something new in small houses because architects never found a good place until recently that could be utilized without encroaching on other valuable space. We have done away with the second or back parlor and we have tiled for years for some satisfactory way of disposing of the furniture necessary to accommodate a lot of friends when they call in the evening and assemble in one large room. The piano at such times is always in the way, still you want it within easy reach in case of necessity.

Music is the only polite method known to modern society of discouraging conversation. Every hostess is taxed to her utmost resources at times to control certain acquaintances who insist on entertaining her com-hand. Most women will make a room of this kind save dollars during the year.

Another feature that every woman likes is the large linen closet. Where you have no attic a large store room of this kind is especially valuable, for, besides providing a place for house linen, bedding, etc., it is the proper place for the storage of trunks, suit cases, clothing that is not in every day use, and a great many other things that you want to refer to occasionally.

The roof of this house is different from ordinary houses, which fact alone is something to recommend it, because every house should have a distinct individuality as different as possible from the ordinary. You get tired of seeing a great many houses in the neighborhood all topped with the same style of roof. A roof means a good deal, both in appearance and comfort. A steep roof like this will dry immediately after a shower, while a roof built on a lower pitch will remain wet for hours, sometimes days at a time during a rainy season and this has a great deal to do with the lasting qualities of shingles. Another advantage of a steep roof is the room you get for closets where the ceiling would be too low for any other purpose.

The down stairs of this plan is exceptionally good. To commence with there is a vestibule that is large enough to hold overcoats, hats, rubbers, umbrellas, and such truck that is very much in the way in a room that is used for any other purpose. Then, as you leave the vestibule you enter a very light, pleasant reception hall that is just right for a music room. You place the piano in the bow window where you have light on both sides. The windows are placed high enough to let the sun over the piano and in the center and over a music rack at the left hand side and a lamp table at the right. An arrangement of this kind not only makes good use of a reception hall, but it

NO MEDICINE

But Change of Food Gave Final Relief.

Most diseases start in the alimentary canal—stomach and bowels. A great deal of our stomach and bowel troubles come from eating too much starchy and greasy food.

The stomach does not digest any of the starchy food we eat—white bread, pastry, potatoes, oats, etc.—these things are digested in the small intestines, and if we eat too much, as most of us do, the organs that should digest this kind of food are overcome by excess of work, so that fermentation, indigestion, and a long train of ills result.

Too much fat also is hard to digest and this is changed into acids, sour stomach, belching gas, and a bloated, heavy feeling. In these conditions a change from indigestible foods to Grape-Nuts will work wonders in not only relieving the distress but in building up a strong digestion, clear brain and steady nerves. A Wash. woman writes: "About five years ago I suffered with bad stomach—dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation—caused, I know now, from overeating starchy and greasy food."

"I doctored for two years without any benefit. The doctor told me there was no cure for me. I could not eat anything without suffering severe pain in my back and sides, and I became discouraged."

"A friend recommended Grape-Nuts and I began to use it. In less than two weeks I began to feel better and inside of two months I was a well woman and have been ever since. I can eat anything I wish with pleasure. We eat Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast and are very fond of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE CASH IN ADVANCE.

Out of a list of twenty-two Congressmen elected in Ohio, there were only three Republicans.

How to get rid of Bryan is bothering the Democrats more than the Tariff and all the other unsettled isms of the day.

"Cheap at $100,000 a year," said Frank Munsey of T. R. in a contributory editorial capacity. Well, now, if ever, is the appointed time.—Louisville Times.

Corn and bluegrass seed both seem to be going down in price. The Bourbon News notes the sale of a lot of corn at 40c a bushel and of two lots of bluegrass seed, about 8,000 bushels, at 65 cents.—Flemingsburg Times-Democrat.

"Going down" has a familiar old Democratic sound.

After a three year trial of the commission form of government Spokane is going to turn back to her old charter. Just another reform gone wrong.—Commercial Tribune.

The PUBLIC LEDGER has always "fit" against the commission fad. Its as bad as the Bull Moose progressive rot.

The President is preparing to push his policies the same as if he had not been defeated. He has already begun work on his main message to Congress and will, as heretofore, follow it with several supplementary ones. He will call for immediate and severe cuts in certain tariff schedules, but will firmly oppose reductions that would tend to cripple any industry; he will also urge a Federal incorporation law and the making of specific acts of unfair trade misdemeanors.

Jim Cox, the new Democratic Governor-elect of Ohio now proposes to "knock the capital P. out of Democracy." He declares he will stand for no frills or spike-tailcoats at his inaugural ball. Thus Mr. Cox joins the great throng of the "outraged," whose mouth is even open to tell all they don't know and a little bit more. Cox should pattern after his new President and simply keep his off ear to the ground and just "listen." He'll hear something drop soon enough anyway.

CORPORATIONS MUST STAND FOR IT.

Concerning the matter of increased assessment on the various Kentucky corporation which the railroads are fighting, it is said of the recent meeting at Frankfort that there will not be a compromise in the interests of the railroad companies. A member of the Assessing Board said it would take no action that would make the people think that it had been bought.

Auditor Bosworth said: "I promised the people I would vote to make the corporations pay their part of the taxes and so far as I am concerned the Courts will have to settle this case, for we are right and having nothing to take back."

It is believed that the State Board has no authority to reconsider its action after the assessment is completed and the board adjourned. The railroad companies do not want to go into Court. They want to pursue the policy of give and take, but the Assessing Board will not back up, and unless there is a very decided change in sentiment the question will go to the Supreme Court.

A member of the conference said: "The meeting was a feeler on the part of the railroads and they got a shock instead of sympathy." Justus Goebel was not present.

The Democratic candidates for Postmasters are as thick as flies around a molasses barrel although Postmaster Mitchell's term does not expire for over three years.—Vanceburg Sun.

The task of Hercules: President-elect Wilson announced in speaking of the tariff and monopoly questions, that he proposed to carry out the pledges made in his campaign speeches to cut special privilege out of the tariff schedules and to destroy private monopoly. There is an old saying: "Let he who putteth on his armor not boast like he who taketh off his armor."

The draining of this country of money, which is the case under low tariff laws, is what makes it poor and weak. The gold and silver of a nation is its lifeblood. Take it away by the million to pay for goods manufactured abroad and you sap our nation's strength, just as you sap an individual's strength if you tap an artery. Under a low Democratic tariff we send away our money—our blood. Under a Republican protective tariff we are getting new blood all the time, because, as a rule, the balance of trade is in our favor. Read the messages of our Presidents back in the fifties and you will see that they tell how, under the low Walker tariff, the millions of gold mined in California went into one ceaseless current abroad to pay for manufactured goods. We are now keeping that gold, the nation's lifeblood, at home where it belongs.

WAR ON FILTHY STORES.

A systematic effort to obtain clean and sanitary groceries is to be made by the Chicago Clean Food club. The object of the organization is to enforce cleanliness in neighborhood stores. Some of the tenets of the club, which plans to hold an exhibition of a model store in that city are:

- No cats to be allowed in grocery stores.
- No chickens to be kept in crates on sidewalks.
- Stores having flies to be blacklisted.
- No horse blankets to be kept in delivery wagons.

Everything to be kept off floor and everything to be kept covered.

The club is co-operating with the public school department of domestic arts and sciences. It will attempt to enforce observance of its requirements by confining the patronage of its members to approved stores.

TODAYS BEST POLITICAL JOKE.

The Times desires to present, as America's representative to the Court of St. James, the name of that representative American, William Jennings Bryan. He is in many ways our foremost citizen, so regarded abroad and so esteemed at home. He possesses in singular conjunction all the qualities, and we can think of not a single drawback. His urbanity, his suavity, his charm of manner, of temper and of speech are alike unapproached and unapproachable; his knowledge of men, of his own land and his own people is surely extensive and peculiar; a scholar who is not bookish, a lawyer who does not talk cases, a statesman who does not hold himself aloof, here is a big man of big caliber, filling by his own work a big place in the world.—Louisville Times.

Bill Bryan is the lone iceberg that's going to send the good ship Democracy down to Davy Jones's locker.

Mr. Bryan is a mighty good Republican asset.

"Did you ever tell that young man that late hours were bad for one?" asked father at the breakfast table.

"Well, father," replied the wise daughter, "late hours may be bad for one, but they're all right for two."

Put a Ten-Dollar Bill

In an old stocking and keep it there for twenty years. Then take it out and see what you will have. Put a ten dollar bill in our savings department at 3% interest and keep it there for twenty years. Then take it out and you will have $18.10. It's the difference between hoarding and saving. Men have made millions by saving. No man has ever made a penny by hoarding.

CENTRAL WAREHOUSE

$50,000 Enterprise Complete
In Every Feature in Heart of City

Under Expert Management of Pioneer Tobacco Men

The new Central Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse just finished is one of the finest and best equipped auction houses in the entire tobacco section. It is ideally situated in East Third street on the main line of the C. & O. which gives it perfect shipping facilities. The structure runs from Poplar street to Lexington street, a distance of 282 feet and has a depth on both of said streets of 165 feet.

1. M. Lane was the contractor and all the work and fittings are the product of home labor. The Central has a floor sales capacity of 500,000 pounds daily and its concrete driveways in the main building will furnish room for 100 wagonloads of tobacco. It has floor space for 1,500 barrels, while its 150 skylights arranged on the checker-board plan afford just the right shade of light to get all the best looks out of the weed on sale. Its offices, scales and electric lights and full fire hose protection renders the Central about as complete as skill and money could make it.

New stables are to be constructed opposite on the South, which will furnish free stable room for fifty double teams.

The Central is officered by the following well known tobacco men.

President—H. L. Crisp.
Vice President—C. M. Jones.
Secretary—C. W. Payne.
Treasurer—R. L. Turner.
Bookkeeper—Frank M. Allen.

Mr. Crisp, Mr. Jones, Mr. Payne and Mr. Turner are all life long tobacco men from Virginia and the Carolinas and know the loose leaf business from the patch to the package.

Mr. C. M. Jones will be the active sales manager on the Central's floor. He has been identified with the Maysville loose leaf market since the beginning of the industry, knows the farmers, the quality, color and condition of every leaf of tobacco, and as a loose leaf expert he has no superior.

Colonel Zuckery Taylor Broughton is to be the auctioneer.

The Central will bear critical inspection and as its cards say, it is A Big, Bright, Broad New Building, "Built for Business."

Telephone 183.
The selling season opens Tuesday, December 31.

WOMEN SHOULD BE PROTECTED

Against So Many Surgical Operations. How Mrs. Bethune and Mrs. Moore Escaped.

Sikeston, Mo.—"For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I cramp and had backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do my own housework, hoe my garden, and milk a cow. I am an entertainer company and enjoy them. I can visit when I choose, and walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the month. I wish I could talk to every suffering woman and girl."—Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Murrayville, Ill.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a very bad case of female trouble and it made me a well woman. My health was all broken down, the doctors said I must have an operation, and I was ready to go to the hospital, but I was so that I began taking your Compound. I got along so well that I gave up the doctors and was saved from the operation."—Mrs. CHARLES MOORE, R. R. No. 3, Murrayville, Ill.

MISS BAYLESS
Will Become Secretary to New Matron of the White House

The Cincinnati Post contained a picture of Miss Mary Bayless, a former West Union girl, who is Secretary to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, the new matron of the White House.

Miss Bayless is a daughter of Judge F. D. Bayless and has gained considerable prominence in theatrical circles. She was a clerk in the recent Ohio Legislature and has served as Secretary to literary people of prominence.

After graduating from the Academy of Music in Maysville, she spent one year as a law student in her father's office.

She taught music (piano) for several years, and took a business course, including shorthand, at Cincinnati, in which city she also received a diploma in Miss Haywood's dramatic school.

Miss Bayless made a tour of Europe a few years ago.

HOME WAREHOUSE

Mammoth Loose Leaf Tobacco Plant Nearing Completion

Covers Four Acres of Ground and is the Largest Building of its Kind in the World

Maysville, the coming season will be the second largest loose leaf tobacco market in the world, being second only to Lexington. Last season Lexington sold nearly 50,000,000 pounds which brought over $5,000,000, while Maysville sold about 20,000,000 pounds which brought about $2,000,000.

The story of the development of the Maysville tobacco market since the loose leaf broke was first started here, only three years ago by Shinkle, Groppenbacher & Ellis, is one of surprising interest and magnitude.

The six loose leaf tobacco sales warehouses in Maysville cover more than eight acres of floor space under roof and represent a cash outlay of $300,000.

The loose leaf houses, finished and to be finished, when the season opens on December 3d, are the following:

Home Warehouse, 380x350 feet.
Central Warehouse, 165x252 feet.
Planters' Warehouse, 100x422 feet.
Farmers' Warehouse, 100x460 feet.
Independent Warehouse, 100x390 feet.
Growers' Warehouse, 100x122 feet.

This does not include the great plant of the American Tobacco Co., consisting of three immense buildings, the J. P. Taylor plant and the J. B. Heiser plant.

The Home Warehouse Company is to be congratulated for its foresight in securing the Hall property, South of Forest avenue. Its situation is all that could be desired; on three streets, with the L. & N. railroad giving direct connection for shipping.

The Home Warehouse is quite the biggest thing, in mammoth dimensions, in Kentucky. Such is the bigness of this building that the Republicans and the Democrats could both hold their National conventions in it at the same time and then there would be plenty of

SYNOPSIS.

Major Lawrence, son of Judge Lawrence of Virginia, whose wife was a Lee, sent on a tour of duty to Gen. Washington, just after the winter at Valley Forge. Disguised in a British uniform, Lawrence arrives within the enemy's lines. The Major attends a great fete and saves the "Lady of the Doubt" from the hands of a villain. He is then captured by a British officer, and the "Lady of the Doubt" is rescued by a British officer. The Major is then captured by a British officer, and the "Lady of the Doubt" is rescued by a British officer. The Major is then captured by a British officer, and the "Lady of the Doubt" is rescued by a British officer.

CHAPTER XXII.

I Uncover Captain Grant.

The thicket was sufficiently dense to conceal us from the man, who remained standing at the foot of the steps. He was but a mere dark shadow, and I could not even distinguish that he was a soldier, yet the danger of his presence was sufficiently great, for should he advance to the right he would come upon Grant's unconscious form, and in that silence the slightest noise might arouse suspicion. Mistress Claire clung to my hand, but only to whisper a sentence of instruction.

"Go straight north, major, until you reach the hedge; follow the shadow of that beyond, and then take the road running westward. Don't mount until you reach there—goodbye."

"Goodbye, you will not forget me?"

"I—I am afraid not—but you must go!"

I left her standing there, a faint gleam of white against the dark shrubbery, motionless.

There is no incident of that night's ride which I recall distinctly. I merely pushed on steadily through the darkness, leaving my mount to choose his own course, confident we were headed toward the river. I was sufficiently acquainted with the valley of the Delaware, when daylight came, to decide upon the nearest ford. As to the British patrols, I must run the risk of dodging these, but felt safe from such an encounter for several hours. In truth I met no one, having no occasion to even draw rein, although we passed through two small villages, and by a number of farms. I could not even determine that these houses were occupied; they were dark and silent, even the galloping hoofs of my horse failing to awaken response.

It was already daylight when I drew up on the bluff summit to gaze down into the river valley. In the middle distance small villages faced each other across the stream, and toward these most of the roads converged—proof of the existence of a ford. I could not be mistaken as to the town—Burlington on the Jersey shore, and opposite Bristol on the Pennsylvania side. I should be safe enough in the latter, even if we had no outpost stationed there. I knew homes along those shaded streets, where food would be forthcoming, and where I could probably procure a fresh horse. It was the nearer town, nestled on the Jersey bank, that I studied with the greatest care, but, so far as I could see, the single street was deserted. To the south, certainly two miles away, a squadron of horse were riding slowly, surrounded by a cloud of dust. Without doubt this was the British patrol that had left the village at daybreak.

It was a hot, close morning, and the padded Ranger's coat heavy and tight-fitting. I took it off, flinging it across the saddle pommel. As I did so a folded paper came into view, and I drew it forth, curiously. My eye caught the signature at the bottom of a brief note, and I stared at it in surprise. Fagin! How came Fagin to be writing to Captain Grant? He pretended to be a Tory to be sure, yet both armies knew him as a mischievous, clever, plundering loyalist and patriot alike. There came to me a memory of Farrell's chance remark that Grant had some connection with this fellow's reading. I had not seriously considered it then, but now—why, possibly it was true. I read the lines almost at a glance, scarcely comprehending at first, and then suddenly realized the base villainy revealed.

"I have the money and papers, but the girl got away. Will wait for you at Lone Tree tonight. Don't fail, for the whole country will be after me as soon as the news gets out about Elmhurst."

So that was the reason for this raid—Grant's personal affair. He had returned to Elmhurst, leaving his men to trudge on into Philadelphia under their Hessian officers so that he might communicate with Fagin. What a pity it was I had failed to kill the fellow, instead of leaving him unconscious.

The Major perhaps they were in the coat also. Surely Grant had no time to change or destroy them, as he must have ridden directly to Elmhurst. I searched the pockets of the garment hastily, finding a note or two, his orders to Lord Delavan, and a small packet tied securely by a cord. I felt no hesitation in opening this, and ascertaining its contents. The lines I read hastily seemed to blur before my eyes; I could barely comprehend their purport. Little by little I grasped the meaning of it all, and then my mind leaped to recognition of Grant's purpose. They were notes of instruction, brief orders, suggestions, memoranda, such as might be issued to a secret agent.

These were addressed simply "Mortimer," many unsigned, others marked by initials, but I instantly recognized the handwriting of Washington, Hamilton and Lee. Without question this packet was the property of Eric Mortimer, but why had the boy preserved these private instructions, covering months of operations, I should judge, although scarcely one was dated? And what caused them to be of value to Captain Grant?

The answer came in a flash of suspicion—the colonel. He could be threatened with them, blackmailed, disgraced before Sir Henry Clinton, driven from his command. They were addressed merely to "Mortimer," discovered at Elmhurst, and were sufficient to convict of treason. It was a death-sentence, well conceived, and Grant was fully capable of carrying it out to the end. I could realize what the possession of these papers meant to him—military advancement, a distribution of the Mortimer estate in which he would doubtless share, and a fresh hold on Claire whereby he could terrify the girl into accepting them.

I stood there in uncertainty, turning these papers over and over in my hands, striving to determine my duty. Should I return to Elmhurst? To do so would only bring me into renewed peril, and would apparently benefit no one. Without this packet Grant was helpless to injure Colonel Mortimer. As to Claire, Seldon would protect her for the present, and as soon as the father returned, he would doubtless compel her to accompany him back to Philadelphia. The best service I could render was to destroy these notes, and then seek out Eric Mortimer, in Lee's camp, and tell him the whole story. All that anyone could do now was to warn the Mortimers against Grant, to let them know his treachery, and this could be best accomplished through Eric. Although in different armies, striving against each other in the field, there must still exist some means of communication between father and son, or, if not, then between brother and sister.

With flint and steel I built a small fire of leaves in a cleft beside the road, and fed to the flames one by one the papers from the packet, glancing over each one again to make sure of its contents; all were addressed alike, simply "Mortimer," but upon two I found the word "Elmhurst." It was easy to see how the discovery of such communications would tempt an unscrupulous scoundrel like Grant to use them to injure another, and win his own end, but why had that young Eric failed to destroy them as soon as received?

When the last paper had been reduced to ashes, I stamped out the embers of fire under my boot heel, and, with lighter heart, rode down the hill toward the ford.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Between Love and Duty.

It was already growing dusk when I rode into our lines at Valley Forge. A brief interview with Colonel Hamilton revealed his appreciation of my work, and that my hastily made notes of the Philadelphia defenses had been received twenty-four hours earlier. They had been delivered at headquarters by an officer of Lee's staff; no, not a boyish-looking fellow, but a black-bearded captain whose name had been forgotten. All Hamilton could remember was that the notes had been originally brought in by an Indian scout. Eager to discover Eric Mortimer, I asked a week's release from duty, but there was so much sickness in the camp, that this request was refused, and I was ordered to my regiment.

Busy days and nights of fatigue followed. Washington, watching like a hawk every movement of Sir Henry Clinton in Philadelphia, convinced by every report received that he was about to evacuate the city, bent all his energies toward placing his little army in fit condition for battle. Some recruits were received, the neighboring militia were drawn upon, and men were taken from the hospitals, and put back into the ranks as soon as strong enough to bear arms. Inspired by the indomitable spirit of our commander, the line officers worked incessantly in the wedding together of their commands. I scarcely knew what sleep was, yet the importance of the coming movement of troops held me steadfast to duty. Word came to us early in June that Count d'Estaling, with a powerful French fleet, was approaching the coast. This surely meant that Clinton would be compelled to retreat across the Jersey, and a portion of our troops were advanced so as to be within easy striking distance of the city the moment the evacuation took place. The remaining commands pressed farther north, near convenient crossings of the Delaware, prepared for a forced march across the British line of retreat. Maxwell's brigade, with which I was connected, even crossed the river in advance, co-operating with General Dickinson and his New Jersey militia. All was excitement, commotion, apparently disorder, yet even amid that turmoil of approaching battle, the Hamilton recalled my request, and granted me two days' leave. His brief note reached me at Coryell's Ferry, and, an hour later, I was riding swiftly across the country to where Lee had headquarters.

Not once during all those days and nights had the memory of Claire left me. Over and over in my mind I reviewed all that had ever occurred between us, striving in vain to guess the riddle. Now I would see and talk with her brother, and perhaps obtain the explanation needed. Yet I have gone into battle with less trepidation than when I rode into Lee's headquarters, and asked his chief-of-staff for Eric Mortimer. He looked at me strangely, as I put the question.

"I should be very glad to oblige you, Major Lawrence," he replied gravely, "but unfortunately I have no present knowledge of the young man."

"But he was attached to General Lee's staff?"

"Only in a way—he was useful to us as a scout because of his intimate knowledge of the Jerseys. His home, I understand, was near Mount Holly."

"What has become of him?"

"All I know is, he was sent out on a special mission, by Washington's own orders, nearly a month ago. We have not directly heard from him since. An Indian brought a partial report of his operations up to that time; since then we have received nothing."

"An Indian?" I exclaimed. "The same who brought in my notes?"

"I believe so, yes, now that I recall the matter. I had no opportunity to question the fellow; he simply left the papers with the orderly, and disappeared."

"And you have heard nothing from young Mortimer since?"

"Not a word."

"He must be dead, or a prisoner."

The chief smiled rather grimly. "Or deserted," he added sharply. "I am more inclined toward that theory. He was a reckless young devil, attracted to our service more, it seemed to me, by a spirit of dare-devilry than patriotism. Lee thought well of him, but I was always suspicious. He belonged to a family of loyalists, his father a colonel of Queen's Rangers. Did you know him, Lawrence?"

"The father, not the son. But I am not willing to believe evil of the boy. I cannot conceive that treachery is in the Mortimer blood, sir, and shall have to be convinced before I condemn the lad. When did he leave here last?"

"About the middle of May."

"Would you mind telling me his mission? Where he was sent?"

The officer glanced keenly into my face; then ran hastily over a package of papers taken from an open trunk.

"I can see no harm in doing so now, major. He was sent to communicate with a British officer, a prominent Tory—who has associations with 'Red' Fagin, and others in Monmouth county. This officer has in the past, for a consideration, furnished us with valuable information, generally through young Mortimer, who knew him. He had written us that he had more to sell."

"Where were they to meet?"

"At a rendezvous known as the Lone Tree, not far from Medford."

"Was the Tory officer named Grant?"

"He stated at me in surprise. 'I am not at liberty to answer.'"

"Oh, very well; however, I understand the situation even better than you do probably. Only I advise you one thing—don't condemn that boy until you learn the truth. Grant is an unmitigated, cold-blooded scoundrel, and the treachery is his. You'll learn that, if you wait long enough. Mortimer is either dead, or in Fagin's hands. Good-night."

I passed out, and was beyond the guard, before he could call me, even had he desired to do so. I had no wish to talk with him longer. I felt disappointed, sick at heart, and realized this staff officer was strongly prejudiced against young Mortimer. It seemed to me I saw a little light, although not much. Eric had been at Elmhurst, and Claire was not innocent of his presence in that neighborhood. She was shielding him, and it was through her help that his first report to Lee had been sent back by the Indian. Then Eric must have been in the house while I was there. Indeed it must have been Eric who made me prisoner. And to protect him she had told me a deliberate falsehood.

As I rode back through the night, finding a path almost by instinct through the maze of military encampments, I thought of all these things, exonerating her from wrong, and yet wondering more and more at her real connection with the various events. This chief had not stated what information of value Grant had promised to reveal; nor what Eric's first report had contained. In my sudden disappointment I had forgotten to inquire. And where could the boy be? What could have happened to him? Something serious surely to keep him thus hidden for nearly a month. Claire would know, but she was probably long ago back in Philadelphia in the heart of the British garrison. And if I were, I was tied band and foot by discipline; helpless to turn aside from duty now in the face of this new campaign. Every man was needed, and no personal consideration would excuse my leaving the ranks even for a day. It was with heavy heart I rode down to the camp of my regiment, and lay pillowed upon the saddle, with the drums would sound in a few short hours.

It was hard to work through the routine of the next few days, although some excitement was given us by Maxwell's brigade by scouting details sent across the valley to observe the movements of the British patrols. On such duty I passed the greater portion of two days in the saddle, and, by chance, met both Farrell and Duval, who were with the Jersey militiamen, now rapidly coming in to aid us, as the rumors of an impending battle spread across country. Farrell came at the head of fifty men, rough looking, raggedly dressed fellows, but well armed, and I had a word with him while pointing out where Dickinson's troops were camped. Unfortunately he knew little of value to me. Mortimer's column of Queen's Rangers had passed his place on their return to Philadelphia two days after my escape. Grant was not with them, but Claire was, while Peter had been left behind at Elmhurst. Fagin had not been overtaken, although the Rangers had engaged in a skirmish with some of his followers, losing two men. Colonel Mortimer had been wounded slightly. As to Eric he knew nothing—no one had even mentioned the lad's name.

It was thus clearly evident I could do nothing, although I now possessed a well defined theory of just what had occurred. To my mind Eric was in the hands of Fagin, either hidden securely away among the sand caves for some purpose connected with Grant's treachery, or else with the intention of claiming the reward for his capture offered by Howe. The former probability seemed most likely in view of Grant's failure to return to Philadelphia with Colonel Mortimer, yet there was no reason why the conspirators should not wreak vengeance, and win the reward also. But did Claire know, or suspect the predicament of her brother? If she did, then she was seeking to conceal the truth from her father, but would never remain long inactive in the city. I knew the girl's real spirit too well to believe she would fall for long in leaning to the boy's fate.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Forcing Clinton to Battle.

I was left behind at Coryell's Ferry, for the purpose of hastening forward any supplementary orders from Washington, when Maxwell, and the Jersey militiamen, pressed forward in an effort to retard the march of the enemy. From the reports of scouts we began to understand what was occurring. Before dawn on the eighteenth of June the British army began leaving the city, crossing the Delaware at Gloucester point, and by evening the motley host, comprising Regulars, Hessians, Loyalists, and a swarm of camp followers, were halted near Haddonfield, five miles southeast of Camden.

The moment this knowledge reached Washington, he acted. In spite of opposition from some of his leading officers, his own purpose remained steadfast, and every preparation had already been carefully made for energetic pursuit. Our troops fit for service numbered less than five thousand men, many of these hastily gathered militia, some of whom had never been under fire, but the warmth and comfort of the summer time, together with the good news from France, had inspired all with fresh courage. Whatever of dissension existed was what among the coterie of general officers, the men in the ranks being eager for battle, even though the odds were strong against us. There was no delay, no hitch in the promptness of advance. The department of the Quartermaster-General had every plan worked out in detail, and within two days, the entire army had crossed the river, and pushed forward to within a few miles of Trenton. Morgan, with six hundred men, was hurried forward to the reinforcement of Maxwell, and relieved from my duties at the ferry. I was permitted to join his column.

By Camel Across the Sahara.

N. L. More, a Frenchman, 24 years old, has just completed a journey by camel across the Sahara from Aden to Timbuctoo, in the French Sudan. His object was to mark out the route for a proposed aeroplane flight across the desert. He was away from civilization for 13 months, and covered more than 5,000 miles. At Ain Salah, which was reached after 13 days, the traveler met another Frenchman and his wife, living in the lonely district. After that the caravan went for 29 days without meeting another human being.

Farrell Came at the Head of Fifty Men, Well Armed, and I Had a Word With Him.

ably seemed most likely in view of Grant's failure to return to Philadelphia with Colonel Mortimer, yet there was no reason why the conspirators should not wreak vengeance, and win the reward also. ## Man and the Mammoth

The skeleton of a mammoth discovered in the department of Pas de Calais, France, measures 49½ feet in length. The head is well preserved, with finely enameled molars of the Siberian type, thus furnishing one more proof that the whole country was once a land of ice and snow. At a dinner given recently on a sand-bar in the Danube an attempt was made to convey an idea of the food consumed by man in the time of the mammoth. Cabage soup cooked over hot stones, horse ham, roast pork with boiled millet, and turnips cooked in hot ashes composed the bill of fare. The desert was dried pears and honey.—Harper's Weekly.

Sounds Like Good Logic.

Recently, several educators came to the conclusion, after a lot of argument and discussion, that it is useless to teach girls higher mathematics and logic and that the time should be devoted to giving the girls a more practical training that will fit them to be housewives and mothers. It is much better, say the educators, to teach cooking, housekeeping and nursing. So far as logic is concerned, the educators point out that the minds of young women can be disciplined just as much, if not more so, by putting them through rigorous courses in what will be of practical benefit to them in life. It further is argued that mathematics and such studies do not help a woman to be a better companion to her husband, for he uses those things only in his business, and a woman rather should study things that are of help to him in his hour of relaxation.

Emotions and the Senses.

Pleasurable sensations arouse pleasant emotions. The sunshine is always enlivening to some people, and the gloom always depressing—men have been through rigorous courses in what will be of practical benefit to them in life. It further is argued that mathematics and such studies do not help a woman to be a better companion to her husband, for he uses those things only in his business, and a woman rather should study things that are of help to him in his hour of relaxation.

HUNTING DR. GREGG

By CLARA INEZ DEACON.

Godfrey Gyna, artist, was an athlete. That is, he was going to be some day. In his studio in the city he swung Indian clubs and lifted weights, and down at his brother's farm, where he passed most of his Sundays, he did more.

In rose with the lark to tramp around in the dew and breathe through his nose. The rest of the family growled about it, and the lark put him down as an eccentric. He felled trees to get shoulder muscles, and as he wasn't particular as to whose trees they were, old Farmer Hobbs made him pay five dollars each for them.

He lifted 50-pound stones over fences, climbed trees, ran up and down hills, and did so many other things that seemed curious to the farmers around that the report got abroad that he was a little touched in the head.

All this wouldn't amount to shucks had not an accident happened to Mr. Gyna one morning as he was jumping a fence. He caught his toe on the top rail as he went over and fell in such a way that he broke the thumb on his right hand. This was on a morning when he had risen with the lark, and long before anybody else was astr.

A broken thumb needs more attention than a broken neck. There must have been a visit to the doctor's and some bandaging.

With a rag tied about the aching thumb, Mr. Godfrey Gyna started off down the highway at a fast walk. He had made two-thirds of the distance when a young lady came out of a manor house just ahead of him and took the highway. Her jaw was tied up with a cloth, and she seemed in a hurry to get somewhere.

"It's dollars to cents it's a case of toothache," said Mr. Gyna to himself, and the idea almost comforted him.

Mr. Gyna was right about the toothache. Miss Hope Thornton was visiting a married cousin at the manor house. At midnight she was aroused by a tooth trying to jump out of her mouth, and then to early morn she groaned and wept and vowed that if she lived a thousand years she would never do any more wading in brooks. It was an hour after daybreak when she woke her cousin to ask what could be done.

The jaw was handaged up and Miss Hope started out. She saw Mr. Gyna coming, and later on heard his footsteps behind her.

Mr. Gyna didn't mean to overtake the girl, as the pain of his thumb kept him gritting his teeth, but somehow or other he presently found himself keeping step with her and asking:

"Toothache?"

"Yum."

"Had?"

"Awww!"

"Going to Dr. Gregg's?"

"Yum."

"Then this must be the place, for here is his sign."

They both turned in at the gate, and a frosty-haired man said:

"The doctor ain't in."

"Where is he?"

"Out in the fields somewhere to kill a rabbit for breakfast."

"I'll go find him. This young lady has a bad case of toothache."

"She can come in and wait, but he won't do anything. Early as it is, he's half-tight."

"I'll try and sober him up."

Mr. Gyna nodded to the girl to go in and wait, and after much peering and considerable tramping he got sight of the doctor with a gun on his shoulder.

"Patient?" queried the medical man.

"Young lady with the toothache."

"Let her ache."

"Thump."

"Broken, eh? Well, go to town."

"Come on to the house."

"Nix. Nothing doing today."

It hurt like everything, but Mr. Gyna managed to remove his coat and dropped his hat on the grass.

"What's a coming?" asked the doctor.

"You are, unless you want a good licking!"

"Huh! You must have lots of grit to fight with a broken thumb. Well, come along."

At the house, Miss Hope was weeping and the doctor's wife saying:

"Shut up!" exclaimed the doctor as he put his gun away.

"Young lady, open your mouth. Huh! Bit of ulceration. Keep this liquid in your mouth for awhile. Feel better, eh?"

"Yes."

"Give you some to take home. Ache all gone by and by. Now, young man, for the broken thumb."

Mr. Gyna held it out to be looked at and operated on, and it was then that Miss Hope knew that he had been hurt.

"Is it broken?" she asked.

"Out of joint, Miss," answered the doctor.

"And you never told me," she said in reproachful tones to Mr. Gyna.

He tried to smile as the doctor pulled the thumb back into place, but it ended in a groan.

"You poor fellow!"

The doctor looked up and laughed, and his wife tossed her head and said:

"It's no use to advise young women. They are bound to be foolish."

"Then don't advise," grumbled the husband.

Miss Hope and Mr. Gyna walked back together. The toothache had almost vanished, and the thumb felt better. At every one of Mr. Gyna's calls for the next month they talked of toothache, broken thumbs and the doctor. Then there was a change.

Perfect Compliment.

We please ourselves that in you we meet one whose temper was long since tried in the fire, and made equal to all events; a man so truly in love with the greatest future that he cannot be diverted to any less.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

One Way to Live.

The Gadsden put a great many airs for people of limited means. "Why shouldn't they? Their means may be limited, but their credit is quite extensive."

NO SLEEPING BAG FOR THEM

Lapländers Preferred the Snow and the Open Air, and So Had a Comfortable Night.

Sir Henry Lucy tells in the Cornhill Magazine a good story that he had from Nansen, the explorer. It amusingly illustrates the hardy health of the Laplanders.

Part of Nansen's equipment for his trip across Greenland consisted of two sleeping-bags made of undressed skins. On the first night of the journey Nansen and his two Norwegian companions got into one of the bags, pulled the mouth tight across their necks, and so slept in the snow with only their heads out.

Before retiring for rest, Nansen saw the three Laplanders he had engaged for the expedition cozily tucked into the other sleeping-bag. When he awoke in the morning, almost numb with cold, he observed that the bag in which he had tied up the Laplanders was empty, and that they were nowhere in sight. He was afraid they had deserted him, and scrambling out of the bag, went in search of them. He found the three men fast asleep behind a hillock of snow that they had scraped together as a protection against the wind.

"Ah, master," they said, when asked to explain this extraordinary conduct. "We couldn't sleep in that thing. It was too hot, so we got out and have had a comfortable night here."

Truth About Old Age.

George F. Baer, the famous Philadelphia railroad man, said on his seventieth birthday:

"I agree with Professor Metchnikoff about the wisdom of the old. Professor Ostor made it fashionable to decry gray hairs, but my experience has been that the old not only possess wisdom, but they seek it also."

With a smile Mr. Baer added: "The only people who think they are too old to learn are those who really are too young."

Political arguments lose us more friends than they gain votes.

Lameness

Sloan's Liniment is a quick and reliable remedy for lameness in horses and other farm animals.

"Sloan's Liniment possesses anything on earth for lameness in horses and other farm animals. I would not sleep without it in my stable."—W. H. L. Smith, New York City.

Good for Swelling and Abscess. Mr. H. M. Guss, of Lawrence, Kan., writes: "I had a mare with an abscess on her neck and one on her leg. Sloan's Liniment entirely cured her. I keep it in the time for all small and swellings and for everything about the stock."

SLOAN'S LINIMENT is a quick and safe remedy for hog cholera.

Governor of Georgia uses Sloan's Liniment for Hog Cholera. "I heard Gov. Brown (who is quite a farmer) say that he had never lost a hog from cholera and that his remedy always was a liberal use of Sloan's Liniment in a gallon of slops, decreasing the dose as the animal improved. Last month Gov. Brown and myself were at the Agricultural College in building and in the discussion of the ravages of the disease, Gov. Brown gave the remedy as follows:—"

The Wild Sheep of Western Kansu

H. FRANK WALLACE

YOU come by way of Taohow, the new city—a mushroom growth of some six hundred years old—not the old, which lies further to the west. The wall straggles up a hillside and round a sharply rising knoll—a line natural watch-tower. Two-thirds of the area enclosed is devoted to cultivation, while the town itself, fatrooted and in the case of some houses two-storied, meanders about the lower slopes and is almost entirely inhabited by Tibetan Mahomedans. It is in reality the border town between Tibet and China, though Tibet proper lies thirty miles to the west. A few "U" from the city you cross a low pass, from which it is possible to see the snow-capped heights of the Minshan mountains. They look down on a huddled mass of gradually lowering hills, torn and intersected by green, rushing mountain streams from which radiate an interminable series of birch and fir clad gales. The Tao river sharply divides this type of country from the low, bare, cultivated slopes where Taohow lies. From the summit of the pass one drops down between narrow grass-covered corries to the little town—if such it can be called—of Choni, within a few hundred yards of the river. Incidentally, one passes from lackadaisical, inert Chinn into an atmosphere of border feuds, medieval raids, pine-covered, snow-capped peaks and a wild race of Highlanders. It is a quaint little place, like a pigeon's nest in a cluster of red cliffs, dominated by a lamasserie containing six hundred monks, as dirty and evil-looking as most of their tribe. The capital of the Prince of Choni, it is the only town within his dominions, which extend over a district half as large as Scotland. A half-caste Tibetan, aged twenty-three, he furnishes a very pretty parallel to Rehoboth. His predecessor, who was the eighteenth of his line, a popular and wise old ruler, adopted him. The prince, on his death, turned away the old men who had hitherto helped to govern the forty-eight wild tribes who owned allegiance to their master and substituted his own friends, spending his nights with them in gambling, opium-smoking and other forms of dissipation. He is dependent on China and under the authority of the county official, who in turn is subject to the viceroy of Shensi and Kansu. This personage resides at Lanchow. When we arrived at the capital, the prince and about two hundred men (he pays no tribute to China, but must supply two thousand irregular cavalry if called upon) were away in the hills fighting the T'epu, a wild, aboriginal tribe who infest the country to the south of the Minshan mountains. These interesting people are divided into fourteen clans, and are much despised by the Chinese, who only venture through their country once a year. They then organize a big caravan of merchants with guards, and get through as quickly as possible. The T'epu are very hostile to strangers, and it would probably be as much as one's possessions were worth to venture into their territory alone. A clan protects its own friends and the friends of its chief, but not the friends of another clan, who are looked on as legitimate prey. When they hold a stranger in great affection and reverence, they have a custom of regarding him as their adopted father. As an illustration of their character, the prime minister of the late Prince of Choni, being adopted as father by about forty T'epu, went alone among them to retrieve the grandchildren of a Christian convert whom they had kidnapped. All the king's horses and all the king's men were powerless; but this one man, because he was their friend, safely entered their country and returned with the children. They are not agriculturists, but live chiefly by barter, and come into Choni occasionally for provisions. I saw a number of them later on, including a lama who performed a monotonous and somewhat senseless dance for our edification. At times they dash down in a sudden raid, as the Choni are watering their horses and livestock at the river, and whirl them away into the hills before their owners have time to recover from their astonishment. One of their priests was imprisoned by the prince in his yamen. Six of them set out to rescue him, and had the impudence and courage to go and cook their food in the yard of the yamen! So much for the T'epu!

We spent some days in Choni, and on September 11th left for the little village of Archuen, thirty miles to the south, where we were the paying guests of one Chishi. He was a keen hunter, a little thin, wiry man with a pleasant face. The Tibetan houses are far cleaner and more tidily kept than those of the Chinese. We occupied the large family room, which they all contain, and were really very well off. Our hostess, a most masterful lady, who ruled her husband with a rod of iron, had to be warned not to invade the sanctity of our chamber at certain hours, otherwise she and the rest of the village crowded to what they considered a show organized by a beneficent Providence for their especial benefit, in and out of season.

Our object in coming to Archuen was to secure heads of the wild sheep of western Kansu. Dr. J. A. C. Smith, our companion, sent home a specimen which the natives brought him early in 1911; but so far as I am aware it has not hitherto been secured by a white man in this particular part of China. Mr. R. Kingdon Ward has erroneously described it as Ovis Hodgsoni, but this it most certainly is not. A full-grown male stands about three feet at the shoulder and weighs approximately one hundred and fifty pounds. (I give later the measurements of one which I subsequently shot.) The horns are smooth, growing more or less at right angles to the skull and curving upwards and outwards at the tips. The animals are handsomely marked with black on the forelegs, with a white patch on the knee. A black stripe runs up the hind legs to the point of the thigh. The hocks are also black. The chest of the older rams is of a similar color, speckled with white on the neck; the black marking extends between the fore legs. There is a black stripe on the side extending from the point of the thigh to a point short of the elbow. The tip of the tail is black. The general color is gray-brown, though in certain aspects there is a decidedly blue tinge. The muzzle is dark to a line between the eyes, turning to a reddish brown tone at the edges where it merges into the general gray tone of the face. Very closely allied to the burhel of India (Ovis montanus), I cannot be certain if they are identical. It is difficult to compare the two from photographs, but from the remarks of local hunters it would certainly appear that there are differences particularly in the shape of the horns. After a week's hunting from Archuen we decided to move so as to be closer to our ground. George had got on the track of a herd containing three rams, while I had seen a lot of nine, headed by a single ram with one horn. George located his herd on an extremely steep rocky ridge which thrust itself from a grass slope above the river. The ledges were sprinkled with firs and rhododendrons, which added considerably to the difficulties of the task. He slept out on one occasion beneath a ledge of rock with his hunter, climbed a boy the sheep, and would certainly have got a shot had not the latter unnecessarily exposed himself at a critical moment and sent the herd careering off; all of which George explained in a short note reminiscent of Mr. Popsy at his best. He never got on terms with them again. I had seen nothing since my first day out, so we moved five or six miles to the east.

The weather was very changeable, and we experienced snow, hail, thunder, rain and mist in disagreeable succession. On September 25th I reached camp just as it was getting dark, to find that the two shots I had heard in the forenoon were the heralds of success, and that George had secured a very pretty head. I had an alternation of good and bad luck, for spying a ram at 7:30, I had my stalk spoiled by three miserable medicine diggers, followed him all day, had four distasteful stalks, missed him once, and finally killed him at five o'clock in the evening.

The horns measured 20 inches in length, 12 inches in circumference and 28 inches from tip to tip. This, of course, is small in length for an Indian burhel, but good in other respects. The native hunters declare that the heads in this district never attain to very much greater length, and Dr. Smith tells me that the head which he sent to England was somewhat thicker in circumference, but not so long and much more clumsy in appearance. All of which would seem to prove that his was an older ram, which had worn down the tips of his horns, while my specimen is probably that of a rather younger beast, very nearly, if not quite, in his prime.

He certainly was not at all strong smelling, which is a characteristic of the Indian variety, though George said he noticed a distinct odor from the head. The native hunters declare that these sheep rut in January and that the lambs are dropped in May. If this is so, the best rams were probably still on higher ground, which we had not time to reach.

The measurements of my specimen are as follows:

	Inches.
Height (allowing for weight when standing)	35
Length (nose to root of tail, straight line)	48
Length (following curve of back)	55
Tail	8
Fore leg (elbow to point of hoof, straight line)	28
Fore leg girth (below knee)	4 1/2
Fore leg girth (forearm)	9 1/2
Hind leg (point of thigh to point of hoof, straight line)	25 1/2
Hind leg (from hock to point of hoof)	13 1/2
Girth (cleaned)	42

NAPOLEON RELIC FOUND.

It is reported here, says a Paris correspondent of the New York Times, that at the town of Dorpat, in Russia, there has just been discovered a remarkable relic of Napoleon's Russian campaign in the form of a copy of Goethe's "Werther," which was his personal property and accompanied him wherever he went.

The volume, which is bound in leather and in an excellent state of preservation, contains, as well as Napoleon's signature, a curious inscription on the fly leaf by an unknown hand, stating that the book was stolen by a Cossack from the emperor's sledge one night on the retreat from Moscow.

Besides the date of the theft and the name of the thief, details are given of the method by which the Cossack managed to possess himself of the volume.

Mufflers for Aeroplanes

Recent experiments with a muffling box on board an aeroplane, made near Paris, proved successful. The great noise of the motor ordinarily lessens the comfort in flying and fatigues the pilot as well as causes annoyance to passengers. In military work the noise prevents the officers from hearing sounds which come from the ground, and these would often be a useful factor in observations. Pilots cannot use their voices to any extent. Another point is that were the motor silent running the observers could hear sound signals coming from the ground and could also return signals by using trumpets of different pitch, or sirens, as are used on vessels.

The test took place between a military commission, and during the flight it is said that the noise of the motor was so much reduced as to allow the pilot, labourer, to speak to the persons on the ground when he was flying at 300 feet.

The muffler box does not overheat, owing to the strong air cooling which is received. The loss of power is below two per cent., as shown by measurement.

Fitting.

"Yes, I noticed today he had on a changeable tie."

WESTERN CANADA'S PROSPERITY

NOT A BOOM, BUT DUE TO NATURAL DEVELOPMENT.

One of the largest banks in Holland has been doing a big business in Western Canada, and Mr. W. Westerman, the President, on a recent visit into the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, expressed himself as being much impressed with present conditions and prospects, and was convinced that the great prosperity of the Dominion was not a boom, but merely the outcome of natural developments.

Not only has money been invested largely in Western Canada by the Holland Banks, but by those of Germany, France, as well as Great Britain. Not only are these countries contributing money, but they are also contributing people, hard headed, industrious farmers, who are helping to produce the two hundred million bushels of wheat and the three hundred million bushels of the other small grains that the Provinces of the West have harvested this season.

During the past fiscal year there came into Canada from the United States 133,710; from Austria-Hungary 21,651; from Belgium 1,601; Holland 1,077; France 2,094; Germany 4,664; Sweden 2,394; Norway 1,632; and from all countries the immigration to Canada in that year was 254,237. From the United States and foreign countries the figures will be increased during the present year.

Most of these people have gone to the farms, and it is no far look to the time when the prophecy will be fulfilled of half a billion bushel crop of wheat in Western Canada. Advertisement.

Probably Prize Grouch.

A grouchy butcher, who had watched the price of portulacae climb the ladder of fame, was deep in the throes of an unusually bad grouch when a would-be customer, 8 years old, approached him and handed him a penny.

Turning on the youngster with a growl, he let forth this burst of good sensibility:
